My dear Sir,

I have received an answer from Sir Charles Dilke, in which he says, he will have much pleasure in becoming one of my Trustees in union with yourself, so that my part of the business is now concluded.

I have not yet written to Lord Houghton, because I should prefer that you would send me a few lines, expressive of my sincere gratitude to him, for his great kindness to me. I have no talent in letter writing, and as I wish to give him a favorable impression of me, I should feel very greatly obliged to you for this favor.

Have the goodness to send me his address.

My portrait for you, so near finished, it is small, but larger than a miniature. I will send it when you return to London.

Few ladies venture to have their portraits taken at my age, therefore it is rather a curiosity, and somewhat of a ruin. Believe me to remain

My dear Sir

Yours very sincerely
